A Message from the President

Dear Friends of Keystone College,

Autumn is a season of great hope and joy for the Keystone College community, as the campus is once again filled with students. Walking around our beautiful campus each day, I am struck by their energy and optimism as they attend classes, complete assignments, and volunteer for the myriad of clubs and activities Keystone offers. At the same time, I marvel at the skill and tireless dedication of our faculty as they strive to help students succeed academically, professionally, and personally.

The opening of the 2006-07 academic year is particularly significant. We begin the semester with 1,710 students, the largest enrollment in the 138-year history of our College. Included in this total will be 490 new full-time students from communities in Northeastern Pennsylvania, as well as cities and towns across the state and nation. In addition to our 1,310 traditional students, Keystone's adult enrollment continues to soar at our La Plume campus, as well as our Towanda and Delaware Valley Centers.

Keystone College now offers a total of 18 bachelor degrees, and we continue to add new programs in math education, social studies education, leadership studies, and social sciences. This fall, 20 online courses are running, as both adult and traditional students discover the benefits of this learning protocol.

Our growth, however, is not limited to academic programs. In the last six years, Keystone has invested more than $12 million in campus improvements, including over $4 million in residence hall construction and renovation.

As you can see, Keystone College continues to grow in many ways as we prepare today's students to become tomorrow's leaders. To continue this progress, we are grateful for the contributions of time, loyalty, and resources of our alumni, corporate partners, community, friends, faculty, and staff.

We are fortunate to be heading in a positive direction as our Annual Fund continues to expand. In recent years funds raised from alumni have continued to increase, a clear demonstration of the pride that so many of our graduates feel toward Keystone College.

Your continued generosity will play a critical role in helping us make a difference in the lives of the students of Keystone College.

Best wishes,

Dr. Edward G. Boehm, Jr.

A Message from the Chair of the Board of Trustees

Dear Friends,

For the past two years, I have had the honor and privilege of serving as Chair of the Keystone College Board of Trustees. From this perspective, I have witnessed the incredible commitment and generosity exhibited by so many people associated with Keystone College.

Alumni, trustees, faculty, administration, corporations, friends, and staff have joined together to make financial contributions that have enabled the College to pursue its mission of providing the best possible education to our students.

Your gifts to the Annual Fund have helped Keystone in so many ways. New educational programs, campus improvements, advances in technology, increased student services, and additional financial assistance are just a few tangible results of your generous contributions.

Thanks to the leadership of Keystone College President Edward G. Boehm, Jr., our skilled faculty, dedicated administration and talented staff, Keystone College continues to thrive. This year, our enrollment reached 1,710 students, the highest in the College's history.

As you know, Keystone College continues to be recognized as one of the preeminent educational institutions in Northeastern Pennsylvania. However, to meet the goals and challenges which lie before us, we ask for your continued participation in our Annual Fund. Through our collective efforts, we can ensure that Keystone College remains true to its mission of preparing students for success long after they leave campus.

Thank you again for your ongoing support of Keystone College.

Sincerely,

David L. Tressler

KEYSTONE COLLEGE:
Progressive institution grows to meet challenges

BY KRISTIN WINTERMANTEL DURKIN / STAFF WRITER

It's lunchtime at Keystone College, and the dining hall is buzzing with life. Students chat over sandwiches and sodas, and some coaches from the athletic department are conducting an informal meeting over their meals. When Keystone's president, Edward G. Boehm Jr., walks in, it takes him several minutes to make his way to a seat. He's busy saying hello to everyone in the room. He makes a point of stopping by every table, even if it's just something like, "Hey, I like your sweatshirt!"

Our Academic ASSETS

KEYSTONE COLLEGE

Knowledge is power. This region's early civic leaders understood that and founded institutions of higher education with two purposes: to give residents the power to improve their lives individually and to improve the community as a whole. Over the next few weeks, The Sunday Times will profile colleges and universities in Lackawanna County in the series "Our Academic Assets."

He knows many of the students by name, many more than you would expect of a college president— even the president of a small institution like Keystone.

But that is his nature. Dr. Boehm eats, sleeps, breathes and lives Keystone. His watch is orange, to go with the school colors (orange and blue). So is his tie.

Everyone on campus — and many people in the region — know him for his trademark gesture of passing out Keystone lapel pins to everyone he meets. His enthusiasm for the college is infectious — professors and students alike attest to his sincerity.

Over the past 10 years, Dr. Boehm has led a renaissance of the college, which was at the verge of closing its doors when he arrived in 1995. Today, it is a four-year college that offers 17 bachelor's degrees and 15 associate's. It is fiscally sound and boasts a beautiful, renovated campus in northern Lackawanna County, with plans for even more new facilities.

It's clear that Dr. Boehm believes in Keystone just as much as the Factoryville residents who founded the institution as a private high school in the 19th century. They were ordinary citizens who believed in the opportunity for secondary education for their children, and they went to great lengths to achieve it.

The beginning

In the 1860s, Factoryville was a village of 500, located about 15 miles northwest of Scranton. Its name derived from a cotton factory that had briefly operated there in the early part of the century.

On a winter day in 1868, three villagers — Harvey Bailey, Charles Reynolds and James Frear — were gathered in Mr. Frear's general store, discussing the need for a high school in the area. High schools were rare in that era because there was no statewide system to support them. The men began meeting with other citizens at the Factoryville Baptist Church to discuss the issue and, over time, the group decided to found a private academy for the adolescents, to prepare them for college and careers in specific fields.

They raised $10,000, formed a board of directors and received a charter from the state to open the school. Keystone Academy opened in 1869 with 16 students, male and female. It was Mr. Frear who gave the academy its name. Since Pennsylvania was considered the "keystone" state of the United States, he suggested the new school would be the state's "keystone" school.

Classes were conducted at the town's Baptist Church for a few years until a school building could be constructed. The board found and purchased a 21-acre property in neighboring LaPlume and broke ground in 1870 for what would be known as Main Hall. It opened in 1874. Classrooms were heated with small stoves, and only the first floor had running water. Three other buildings followed — a gymnasium and two dormitories for boarding students.

John Harris was Keystone's first principal. He would serve the school for 20 years. Main Hall was later renamed Harris Hall in his honor.

The curriculum focused on mathematics, sciences and languages. There were also classes in music and penmanship, an important subject since documents were usually hand-written in that era. A business curriculum offered banking, bookkeeping, commercial correspondence and law classes.

Part of the academy's mission was to bring secondary education to adolescents from various socio-economic backgrounds, so tuition was kept as low as possible. Total expenses, including tuition, books, room and board, ranged from $168 to $198 per year.

In its early years, Keystone was affiliated with the Baptist faith, a common circumstance at the time. A number of schools were supported by churches in light of the lack of a public high school system. Keystone's charter required that its board members be Baptists. In 1928, that criteria was finally dropped.

Enrollment grew through the rest of the 1800s. By 1879, Keystone had about 180 students. By 1889, there were 220.

The school's most famous alumnus was a student during this era. Christy Mathewson, who would go on to an outstanding career as a major league baseball player and become one of the first players elected to the Baseball Hall of Fame, attended Keystone from 1895 through 1898. He played on the academy's football team for three years and served as pitcher and captain of its baseball team. Baseball would become one of Keystone's major sports, probably because of Mr. Mathewson's legacy.

Enrollment declines

With the advent of more public high schools in the first decades of the 20th century, Keystone's enrollment began to decline. By the late 1920s, the school was in dire straits financially and in danger of closing. The principal, Curtis Coe, proposed converting Keystone into a private junior college.

A group of local businessmen raised money to pay off the school's debts. In 1934, Keystone Academy became Scranton-Keystone Junior College.

Within two years, the college received accreditation from the Middle States Association of Colleges and Schools as well as from the state Board of Education. Under the leadership of its first president, Byron S. Hollinshead, the new college kept the academy's emphasis on liberal arts but focused on preparing students for transferring to four-year colleges.

In 1945, the school shortened its name from Scranton-Keystone Junior College to Keystone Junior College. According to Times-Tribune archives, the change was done to avoid confusion with the University of Scranton.

The end of World War II brought an enrollment boom as veterans entered Keystone under the G.I. Bill. There were nearly two dozen programs of study. The college converted all available space into classrooms, set up temporary housing units, and acquired the former Abington Hills Country Club, two miles from campus, to use for veterans' housing. During the post-war years, Keystone spent more than $400,000 on buildings and renovations. Among the updates were a library and new gymnasium.

Change brings expansion

A new era began in 1960 with the installation of a new president, Harry Miller, Ph.D. He quickly embarked on an expansion program, purchasing more than 100 acres of additional land and building four dormitories, the Hibbard Campus Center and a new library, which was named in his honor.

Dr. Miller also wanted to improve the college's academics. New courses were added, and the curriculum was divided into two tracks: one for "terminal" associate's degrees, and one for students who would transfer to four year colleges. The president also established an academic counseling department to aid students in job placement and transferring into baccalaureate schools.

Programs at the time included business, engineering, occupational and physical therapy, and even prelaw and premedical tracks.

It was during Dr. Miller's presidency that Keystone became known for its strong arts offerings, from visual art and theater to journalism and music. The reputation continues to this day. Dr. Miller also instituted a foreign-student program dedicated to bringing more international students to the school.

In 1966, Gov. William W. Scranton helped to kick off a $3 million fundraising campaign. It was part of a 10-year master plan designed to make Keystone "the best junior college in the country," according to the board chairman at the time, Adrian Ross. An evening division was part of the plan, and there was also talk of converting someday to a four-year college.

Keystone's expansion continued through the 1970s. In 1973, the college opened an astronomical observatory near Fleetville. A 9½-inch, Alvan Clark refracting telescope, housed in a 16-foot dome, had been purchased from Dave Garroway, a 1950s television personality best known for hosting the "Today" show for the NBC network. Physical-science professor Thomas Cupillari had seen an ad for the telescope and proposed the purchase. The observatory complex also contains an auditorium, library and map room.

In the years since, Keystone has opened the observatory to students and to the public, with several lectures and viewing sessions each year. Four years ago, the observatory was named for Mr. Cupillari, who is also a Keystone alumnus from the class of 1960.

A commitment to adult students began in 1975 with the advent of Keystone's Weekender Program. It allowed people who held full-time jobs to attend classes on weekends toward an associate's degree. The program grew quickly and today, classes are held both at Keystone and at the Weekender branch campus in Towanda, which was established in 1993.

By the 1980s, the offerings at Keystone had expanded to include computer science, food service management and food technology, pre-environmental science and forestry and early childhood education.

The Linder Art Gallery opened in Miller Library in 1984, and a new athletic center, named for alumnus and trustee Sergius Gambal, opened in 1988.

Danger of closing

By the end of the decade, the college was in decline. From 1990 to 1994, enrollment decreased sharply, from 763 to 376. In part because of the growth of less expensive, community colleges, there was less of a market for private junior colleges. "Higher education had gotten to a point where there wasn't as much of a place for private, two-year colleges any more," said Mr. Cupillari, who, besides being a physical science and math professor, is also associate dean of the college and director of the observatory.

KEYSTONE: School has blossomed into successful four-year institution

A case study of Keystone College by a doctoral student at the University of Michigan detailed the situation:

Keystone was in debt. Continuous turnover in the college presidency also left faculty and administrators without leadership. In the 1980s alone, there were four presidents. Buildings and other facilities were deteriorating, and morale on campus was at an alltime low, the study said.

The school was literally in danger of closing, said Charlotte Ravaioli, a longtime English professor who was chairperson of the faculty senate in the mid-1990s. The board of trustees had drawn up papers on how to dissolve the institution and placed them on file in Miller Library, the study said.

The trustees, administrators and faculty were in the midst of a search for a new president, she recalled. A board member was serving as an interim president, following the resignation of Robert Mooney, Ph.D., in 1994.

"We were seeking a president who could come in and restore our presence in the community," Mrs. Ravaioli said.

The college found that person in Dr. Boehm.

When he arrived on campus in the fall of 1995, he began small, immediate changes while laying the groundwork for larger ones. Flowers were planted around campus to begin sprucing things up. Better signs were erected to direct people to the school. Faculty were brought into the loop and kept abreast of the new president's plans.

"There was a tremendous love and dedication to Keystone, but at the same time, there seemed to be fear and trepidation about the future," Dr. Boehm said of the atmosphere on campus at the time.

His initial goals included turning the college's finances around, creating baccalaureate programs, and restoring not only the physical beauty of the campus, but also the morale of the faculty and staff.

The administration secured a $4.6 million bond issue and started investing in much-needed renovations. Dr. Boehm and his wife, Regina, made extensive efforts to get out into the community, which began raising public awareness of the school.

Most importantly, Keystone, which had dropped the "Junior" from its name shortly before Dr. Boehm's arrival, embarked on a quest to become a four-year college.

"Enrollment in two-year schools was declining across the United States," Dr. Boehm recalled. "We knew we had to run, not walk, to create baccalaureate programs."

He led the faculty and administration through a lengthy application process and, in May 1998, the state Department of Education granted its approval. Baccalaureate programs began with the 1998-99 school year, with 50 students enrolled. By the 2000- 01 year, nearly 400 students were earning bachelor's degrees.

Keystone's total enrollment now stands at around 1,600 students, about four times more than 1994. And there are always more plans around the corner. Dr. Boehm wants to continue to update and add programs, and seek various accreditations.

"The past few years have been exciting for the faculty here," Mr. Cupillari said. "We're seeing new, young, excited faculty, who have Ph.D.s behind them, taking hold of programs and making them grow. It gives you the confidence that you're leaving this place in good hands."

Though the faculty and staf f regularly sing Dr. Boehm's praises, Keystone's president is quick to downplay his role. Instead, he speaks of the farming families who scraped together the money to found Keystone Academy, and of the long line of teachers who followed.

"We just stand on the shoulders of these people," he said. "There is a history of great people here."

President puts college on the map, secures an academic and fiscal future

LINDA MORGAN / STAFF PHOTOGRAPHER

Edward G. Boehm, Jr., PhD., is the ninth president of Keystone College.

Edward G. Boehm Jr., Ed.D., became president of Keystone College in 1995. Prior to that, he had been a senior vice president for institutional advancement at Marshall University in West Virginia. He holds a bachelor's degree in education from Frostburg State University in Maryland and a master's degree in educational psychology and a doctorate in higher education administration, both from American University. He also served for many years in administrative positions at American University and Texas Christian University. Dr. Boehm recently met with Sunday Times staff writer Kristin Wintermantel Durkin for an interview about the college. Following is an excerpt:

Q. Keystone was in dire straits when you arrived. Why did you take the job as president, and how did you turn the college around?

A. "I was honored to be selected, because they had a large applicant pool. They chose five of us to visit campus. In visiting the campus (for the job interview), I came unannounced and walked around this campus as if I were a parent, because I had arrived early. First of all I noticed it seemed like I drove forever. We needed signs right away, and that's part of this whole effort of putting Keystone on the map. The trustees had already decided to change the name from Keystone Junior College to Keystone College and that most likely, a four-year college was the way to go. All day I walked around that campus and saw groundskeepers, housekeepers, faculty members, administrators, and it was in the summer so there were very few students. But with the students that I ran into and asked, 'What about this place?' I recall there was a tremendous love and dedication to Keystone, but at the same time there seemed to be fear and trepidation about the future. And with much-deferred maintenance, it was not the beautiful place you see today ... (But) there was just something about the people and the place and the location and the region. I still remember saying to (my wife) Regina that it was unique."

Dr. Boehm said he knew how much work needed to be done. "We realized that as Robert Frost said in the poem 'Stopping by Woods on a Snowy Evening,' that we have 'miles to go before we sleep,' our motto was 'miles to go before we rest.' Our strength would be that we would recreate an environment where students would be successful and soar on their strengths, rather than stress on their weaknesses."

He recalled that he began efforts with small improvements — as simple as planting flowers on campus and adding signs. The college then secured a bond issue, which improved the financial picture and allowed badly needed renovations to be done.

Most important, he said, was the need to become a four-year college. "We had to run, not walk, to create baccalaureate programs," he said, "And we had to restore the beauty of the campus and the soul of the faculty and staff ... I was so driven by the loyalty of the people on this campus."

Dr. Boehm noted that since Keystone became a four-year college, "Our full-time enrollment has tripled and our overall enrollment, counting Weekender and part-time, has doubled. And all the growth has been in the baccalaureate programs. We had 37 associate programs in 1995 and now we have 17 baccalaureate programs and 15 associate programs, so we've maintained a strong associate's program."

He described the transformation as a 15-year-long process. "The first five years was to sustain our college, then grow our college, and these next five years, the theme is to take our college from good to great."

Q. What sets Keystone apart from the other colleges in the region?

A. "Number one, the atmosphere of the campus and the Keystone family. Number two, the Keystone Promise, what we promise our students and their families (that within six months of graduating from Keystone they will have received at least one job offer or acceptance into a transfer program or graduate program. If that doesn't occur, Keystone will provide additional courses and career counseling free of charge.) Number three, our size. Our smallness in size is our strength."

Q. What programs has Keystone traditionally been known for?

A. The visual arts program has been strong since the 1960s, Dr. Boehm said, adding that Keystone is also known for its environmental programs. Among other things, the college serves as the site for the federal Mid-Atlantic Center for Urban and Community Forestry.

He also noted that Keystone is known for making its resources — from its network of hiking trails to its astronomical observatory to Chef's Table, the on-campus restaurant run by culinary-arts students — available to the community.

Q. What are the biggest needs and challenges for Keystone right now?

A. "We want to grow with distance learning. That's a challenge for the future — how can we address distance learning in a way that maintains our family atmosphere? As for buildings, we need a student recreation and wellness center that will house a natatorium (indoor swimming pool). And we need either to expand the (current) library, or convert the entire structure into a classroom building, and build a separate, new library.

"And we need to get into research. Student research. Research that's important to the community."

Q. What are the goals for Keystone's future?

A. "We'd like to update our programs based on the needs of the community. We'd like to continue to add programs. We'll still have a liberal arts core to everything.

We'd also like to continue our emphasis on student success, and to increase our number of students — traditional and nontraditional students. And to seek outside funding for scholarships and grants so students who require more resources will be able to attend.

"Our annual fund and endowed scholarships have increased — we really focus on money from private citizens and organizations for our scholarships, because it's not only to bring students here but also to retain them.

"Maintaining small class sizes is another thing, and having the resources to maintain our technology. And maintaining our excellent faculty and staff. "And now that we're a baccalaureate college, we're seeking other accreditations. We're accredited by Middle States (Association of Colleges and Schools), and now we're seeking others.

"We also are working hard to maintain this tremendous spirit that we have, and to make sure we never become isolated from the community, and to continue to be an active participant in the community."

Q. Is Keystone looking to increase its enrollment?

A. "We want to grow our enrollment to about 1,350 full-time students and about 450 Weekender Program and nontraditional students."

Q. What programs are most popular at Keystone, and which ones do you expect to grow?

A. . "I expect our culinary arts to continue to grow, and accounting has really taken off. Our forensic biology and environmental programs are also growing."

Q. What does the college do to address campus crime, date rape, alcohol abuse and other student-life issues?

A. "We start right at orientation, talking about our responsibilities and their responsibilities. Campus crime statistics are given to every student, along with phone numbers for calling campus security. Public-safety officers are assigned to the residence halls, and we have seminars in the residence halls and elsewhere on campus that deal with these issues. We're constantly reinforcing that with our students."

Q. What accomplishments during your presidency are you proudest of ?

A. "The acceptance of Keystone College's new mission as a baccalaureate college, and tied to that is the restoration of the beauty of the campus, and the pride that our students have in their new Keystone. And the strength and number of our academic programs."

Inner-city student finds the doorway to a brighter future

BY KRISTIN WINTERMANTEL DURKIN

MICHAEL MULLEN / STAFF PHOTOGRAPHER

Brooklyn, N.Y., native Lamont Carolina, 22, takes a moment in front of Keystone College's Harris Hall. He is a junior at Keystone, majoring in communications and volunteering as a campus tour guide and member of the service learning club.

You might call Lamont Carolina Mr. Keystone.

He's popular, he's outgoing, and nearly everyone knows his name. He's a member of the Service Learning Club, a campus tour guide, a DJ for the college radio station and a comedian, too. Even Keystone's president, Edward G. Boehm Jr., has heard the buzz about his act with a campus improv group.

At 22, he has a bright future. Now a junior at Keystone, Lamont is considering a career in public relations, probably in New York City.

Life wasn't always this promising.

Keystone's bucolic setting, with its trim lawns and acres of woodlands, couldn't be more different from the world in which Lamont grew up.

Going nowhere

An inner-city kid from Brooklyn, he was raised with three half brothers by a single mother. By the age of 16, he was on a fast track to nowhere. He wasn't going to graduate from high school because of too many absences and failing grades. In addition, there was the pressure of caring for his two younger brothers while their mother was hospitalized for a couple of weeks.

"I was doing awful in school. Terrible. Terrible. Just like everyone else (at the school)," Lamont said.

That same year, he witnessed the shooting of a friend in a street fight. His friend barely survived after multiple surgeries and a long recovery. Suddenly, the dangers of his neighborhood were on his doorstep.

"Everybody, I think, at one point or another, has a moment of clarity," Lamont says now. "I'll never forget that incident. I was just like, 'I've got to get out of here. I've got to show my friends that this isn't the way to go.'"

Lamont had experienced a bit of the world beyond Brooklyn through the Fresh Air Fund, a program that places inner-city children with families in suburban and rural areas for the summer. When he was 10, Lamont spent the summer with a couple in Vermont, Catherine Ring and Jim Rivis. Like many kids in the program, Lamont was invited back each year by his host family.

It was through them that Lamont found a way out of Brooklyn. Catherine Ring's brother and sister-in-law, James and Amy Ring, lived in Fair Lawn, N.J. They asked Lamont to consider moving in with them and their two children and finishing high school in their town. "I had to make a decision," he recalls. "Stay with my family, or leave and secure my future. Have a shot at a better future."

He made the move.

In August 2001, Lamont joined the Rings with his mother's permission and enrolled in 11th grade at Fair Lawn High School. Under their influence, he worked hard and excelled, earned A's and B's. Though the school was predominantly white, Lamont adapted to the new environment and made friends. He began teaching hiphop classes for a local dance company and got involved with a school club, E.R.A.S.E. (End Racism and Sexism Everywhere). Two years flew by, and soon Lamont had to figure out what to do next.

The Rings and his guidance counselor all suggested college, even though Lamont thought he had little chance of being accepted anywhere because of his poor school transcripts from Brooklyn. Keystone was one of the schools his counselor suggested, and the Rings arranged a visit for him. By the end of the trip, during which he stayed in a dorm with a resident assistant, Lamont didn't want to leave the campus. He met the RA's friends and accompanied him to classes. "I was like, 'This is what I want.' All that fear that I couldn't do college went out the door," he recalls.

Lamont was amazed by Keystone's small class sizes, and that teachers knew their students by name. Even things as simple as the trees and natural beauty of the place struck him. He liked the diversity of the campus, too. Minorities comprise 11 percent of the college's student body. "I like to see different people," he said. "People from different cities I've never been to, and different countries."

KEYSTONE COLLEGE STUDENT POPULATION FALL 2005

SOURCE: Keystone College

He was thrilled when the Keystone acceptance letter came. Not only was he the first in his family to graduate from high school, he would also be the first to go to college.

The whole idea was daunting. Before classes even started for his first semester, in 2003, Lamont began reading his textbooks to get a jump on things. He decided to major in communications, which turned out to be a natural fit for his charismatic personality. He made close friends and developed mentoring relationships with various professors.

Head first

And he jumped right into campus life, serving as an RA for a year, and as president of the Campus Activities Board. Since his freshman year, Lamont has volunteered to give campus tours and serve as an orientation leader. "I want to give back to the school. I want people to see what I saw when I came to Keystone," he explains, noting a particular interest in helping other inner-city kids adjust to the rural surroundings.

After classes most days he heads for a 3 to 11 p.m. shift as a staff member at St. Michael's School, a school for troubled boys. Lamont works in the residential program, making sure the kids get dinner, medicines and social services, and get to bed on time. He doesn't view the job as a career path, but it is another way to help kids from a similar background. "A lot of the kids don't realize that I come from where they come from," he said.

There is just one year to go before Lamont achieves the goal that once seemed unattainable.

"In the end, I know it will be so worth it, when I walk down the aisle, and Dr. Boehm hands me that diploma, and I flip that tassel and throw the hat," he says.

"Coming up from welfare to be a college graduate — that's something I look up to," he says. "I don't want to have to repeat that circle of poverty."

KEYSTONE COLLEGE: Noteworthy Alumni

Christy Mathewson
(1880-1925)
Keystone Academy, Class of 1898

One of the first five members of the Baseball Hall of Fame, he is considered the greatest pitcher in the sport's history. After graduating from Keystone, he went on to college at Bucknell University, where he played baseball, football and basketball. He went on to a outstanding major league career with the New York Giants. Among his statistics are 373 career wins, 2,502 career strikeouts and 13 seasons with 20 or more wins. He was known as a gentleman in the sport. He died at the age of 45 of tuberculosis, aggravated by his exposure to mustard gas in World War I.

Austin Burke
Keystone Junior College, Class of 1970

President of the Greater Scranton Chamber of Commerce for more than 20 years, he holds a bachelor's degree in economics from Dickinson College. At the chamber he oversees programs and services for the community and the organization's 2,200 members. He also serves as executive vice president of the Scranton Lackawanna Industrial Building Co., the chamber's community-development arm.

Diane Paparo
Keystone Junior College, Class of 1976

Principal of Diane Paparo Associates Ltd., an interior design consulting firm in New York City, she earned a bachelor's degree in interior design from Syracuse University. Her work has been recognized in "Great Designers of the World," "Town and Country," "Designer's Quarterly," and "Baron's Who's Who in Interior Design." She serves as the first vice chairperson on Keystone's board of trustees.

Suzanne Fisher Staples
Keystone Junior College, Class of 1965

An award-winning author of six books, she earned a bachelor's degree in English literature and political science from Cedar Crest College. She was a reporter and editor for United Press International for 10 years, working in Hong Kong, India Pakistan, Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Nepal, Sri Lanka, New York and Washington, D.C. She also worked as a foreign-news editor for The Washington Post. Her books include "Shabanu: Daughter of the Wind," a 1990 Newbery Honor Book, "Shiva's Fire," and "Under the Persimmon Tree." Currently she is an artist-in-residence at Keystone.

Edwin W. Kemmerer, Ph.D.
Keystone Academy, Class of 1895

An internationally known economist, he earned a doctorate from Cornell University and was an economics professor at Princeton University for 31 years. Over the course of his career he wrote books on the Federal Reserve System and on the principles of money. He is best-known for his work as an economics adviser to several nations in the first half of the 20th century, including the Philippines, Mexico, Colombia, Chile, Bolivia, China, Peru, South Africa and Turkey. He also founded the American Association of University Professors, and served as president of the American Economic Association.

Grants Awarded to the College

During Fiscal Year 2005-2006, the College received $996,316 in grants. This amount reflects 69% of requested funds.

George I. Alden Trust
- $75,000 to equip a mathematics center in Kemmerer Hall, providing two additional classrooms and a study area.

Pennsylvania Department of Education
- $125,065 in support of the College's Vo-Ed programs.
- $332,552 for the presentation of three week-long Pennsylvania Governor's Institutes for Educators.

U.S. Department of Agriculture Forest Service/ The Education Research Consortium of the Western Carolinas, Inc.
- $250,000 in continuing support of the Keystone College Environmental Education Institute, which provides continuing education to science and environmental K-12 schoolteachers. This year, the program was expanded to 12 offerings.

Procter & Gamble Foundation – Live, Learn, and Thrive
- $30,000 directed toward the launch of an all-day Kindergarten at the Mellow Family Children's Campus and the Oppenheim Family Children's Center.

New York Times Foundation/ WNEP Channel 16
- $4,800 to be used to subscribe to an international newsfeed that will provide students with the opportunity to review and disseminate world and national news in the classroom and through the College radio station, WKCV.

Pennsylvania Department of Economic Development
- $120,000 for the construction of an elevator in Capwell Hall.

Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board
- $11,500 for the delivery of programs encouraging students to adopt a responsible approach toward alcohol use.

Overlook Estate Foundation
- $7,500 for the continuing support for the Keystone College Maple Sugar Shack, which provides students and the general public an opportunity to learn about the process of making maple syrup and maple sugar.

Pennsylvania Scholars in Service
- $12,500 to be awarded as educational stipends of $1,250 for ten students who complete 450 service hours through the College's Center for Service Learning.

PennServe
- $2,999 for a Martin Luther King Service Project. Keystone's Director of Multi-Cultural Affairs and Keystone students visited area schools to present a program on diversity and multiculturalism.

State Farm Good Neighbor
- $1,000 Service Learning Grant, which enabled a community beautification project.

The College also received programming support from PHEA, the Pennsylvania Partner's in the Arts, and the Lackawanna County Drug & Alcohol Commission.

Evergreen Society of Keystone College

Keystone College's Evergreen Society was established to honor alumni and friends who have made a gift bequest intent known to the College. These donors, who have entrusted the College with their commitment - through charitable remainder trusts, pooled income funds, gift annuities, lead trusts, insurance policies, retained life estates, or confirmed bequests - are recognized with perpetual membership in the Evergreen Society.

Keystone College Scholarships

Keystone College has changed in various ways during its long history, but its mission to provide educational excellence has never wavered. The College is very fortunate to offer many scholarships, all created with one common purpose – the donors' true belief in the mission of Keystone College, without which the reality of a higher education would not be possible for students who benefit from their generosity.

During the 2005-2006 academic year, $375,000 in donor-based scholarship funding was awarded to Keystone students in good academic standing with a demonstrated financial need. Students attending the ninth annual Scholarship Luncheon in October, 2005, had the opportunity to meet the donors who are helping to make their academic dreams possible. Mr. Thomas Davis '52 delivered a motivating keynote address to over 200 scholarship donors, recipients, Evergreen Society members and trustees.

An annual scholarship may be created and supported annually with a gift restricted to the named scholarship fund. Annual gifts average $1,000. Endowed scholarships at Keystone College are established with a minimum gift of $10,000 and can serve as a lasting tribute in honor or memory of someone.

Gifts restricted to any Keystone College scholarship fund are always welcome. Additional information, including the history of Keystone's endowed scholarships, as well as various planned giving options may be found under the Development section of the College's Web site, www.keystone.edu.
